

Overview of the Juvenile Justice System in California

A Fact Sheet Prepared by Youth Law Center

What is the goal of the juvenile justice system?

The California Juvenile Court is designed to handle all matters associated with juvenile law, including juvenile justice or juvenile delinquency proceedings¹. Juvenile delinquency cases concern charges of violations of the criminal law by a “minor.”² However, proceedings in juvenile court are not deemed to be “criminal.”³

The goal of the juvenile justice system is twofold. On one hand, the system is in place to ensure the safety and protection of the public. On the other hand, the system seeks to provide care, treatment, and guidance to minors that have committed violations of the law. This treatment should be consistent with the minor’s best interest; it should hold the minor accountable for his or her behavior, and it should be appropriate for his or her circumstances.⁴ This may include punishment that is consistent with rehabilitative objectives. To meet this goal, California’s Juvenile Justice System generally provides for escalating responses to offenses of increasing severity, such as fines, community service, informal probation, formal probation, detention, and incarceration.⁵

How does a minor get into the juvenile justice system?

If a police officer believes that a minor has committed an offense, he may take the minor into temporary custody and has the discretion to:

- Issue a warning and release the minor; or
- Deliver and refer the minor to a shelter or diversion services; or
- Cite the juvenile for a minor offense and issue a notice to appear; or
- Detain them and take the minor directly to juvenile hall.⁶

In addition, a probation officer may initiate an investigation either on his own initiative or upon formal application by a person to have a petition filed against a juvenile whenever there is reasonable cause to believe that a minor has committed a violation of law.⁷

² “Minor” is defined as a person under the age of 18.

⁷ Cal. Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 653, 653.1.

Does a minor have a right to an attorney?

Whenever a juvenile is detained, he/she has a right to an attorney. When taken before a probation officer the juvenile and their parent/guardian must be advised of the juvenile's right to remain silent, right to have counsel present during interrogation, and right to have counsel appointed if the juvenile cannot afford counsel.⁸

What happens if the minor is taken to juvenile hall?

If the minor is taken to juvenile hall, the probation department has the discretion to accept and "book" the juvenile or not. If "booked", the probation officer or district attorney decides whether to file a petition with the Juvenile Court alleging that the minor has committed a crime. If accepted, the juvenile remains in custody at the juvenile hall pending the outcome of the juvenile court process. Only those arrestees accused of violent crimes are likely to be held, while others will be released back to their parents.

If no petition is filed, what happens?

The probation department, in lieu of formally proceeding with a petition in juvenile court, may also proceed with informal probation, participation by the minor in specific programs of supervision not to exceed 6 months.⁹ The juvenile must meet specific eligibility requirements for informal probation.¹⁰

During the 6-month probationary period when a juvenile is on informal probation, the probation officer retains discretion to file a petition at any time.¹¹ If the probation officer determines that the minor has not completed the terms of the informal probation, he/she must immediately file a petition with the juvenile court.¹²

The specific services of informal probation may include treatment of substance abuse, mental health, or other addictions and will require the juvenile's parents or guardians to participate in counseling or educational programs with the minor.¹³

The probation department may also refer the minor to a local diversion program or just dismiss the case whenever a petition is not filed.

If a petition is filed, how is the Juvenile Court involved?

Overview of the Juvenile Justice System in California

The filing of a petition is akin to filing charges. However, in addition to stating alleged violations of law and facts to support the violation, the juvenile petition contains a notice to the minor's parents of their liability for the cost of care and support of their child while placed in out-of-home care.¹⁴ The juvenile petition requests the court to adjudge and sentence the minor. Once a petition is filed, the juvenile court process begins.

For minors who are held in juvenile hall, the petition must be filed within 48 hours (excluding non-judicial days) of detention and a Detention Hearing must be held by the end of the next judicial day after the petition is filed.¹⁵

A probation officer will be assigned to the juvenile throughout the court process. The probation officer does not represent the minor. It is their job to review the juvenile's case and decide whether and how to proceed. The probation officer's duties include compiling a social study and a pre-disposition report that includes a social history of the minor and provides recommendations to the judge for sentencing of the minor.

Similarly, the district attorney does not represent the minor, but represents the state. It is the district attorney's primary role to support the petition with evidence and to prosecute the case. However, the district attorney may reduce, modify, or drop the petition if warranted.

A minor is not entitled to a jury trial, only to a Jurisdiction Hearing in front of a judge. At the Jurisdiction Hearing, the juvenile court judge will review the probation officer's written report, and any medical, psychiatric, or other reports regarding the juvenile. The judge will also review any evidence offered by the district attorney and the juvenile's attorney regarding the charge and the minor. The court will then make a determination of whether the petition filed against the juvenile is true, and should therefore be sustained.

Even after the filing of a petition, but before the Jurisdiction Hearing, the juvenile may request and the court may grant informal probation if the interests of justice would best be served. If informal probation is granted, the petition is suspended but not dismissed pending successful completion of the 6-month probation.¹⁶ The juvenile court retains jurisdiction and requires periodic progress reports of the juvenile's success in completing the terms of the informal probation. If the court determines that the juvenile is not completing the terms of the informal probation, the petition against the juvenile will be reinstated. If the court determines that the juvenile has successfully completed the program of supervision at the end of the 6-month period, the court will dismiss the petition against the juvenile.¹⁷

If the juvenile is adjudicated a “delinquent” or “ward” of the court, the judge determines where the juvenile will be placed at a Disposition Hearing. The court will review a social study provided by the probation officer and any other relevant and material evidence relating to sentencing from the juvenile’s attorney and the district attorney in determining where to place the juvenile.

The minor can be :

1. Placed on informal probation or formal probation under the supervision of probation in the community¹⁸;
2. Placed under the supervision of probation for placement in a licensed or approved foster care setting (e.g. relative/kinship home, foster home, FFA or a group home)¹⁹;
3. Committed to a juvenile ranch or camp²⁰; or
4. Committed to the California’s Division of Juvenile Justice (DJJ) as a ward of the state²¹. (DJJ was previously known as the California Youth Authority or “CYA”).

Formal probation is a disposition releasing the minor into the community, in lieu of confinement, but under the supervision of a probation officer for a determined period. The juvenile court judge sets the terms of the juvenile’s probation that usually include school attendance, participation in a service program (e.g., substance abuse treatment, anger management, family counseling) and regular meetings with a probation officer, Commission of another crime while on probation will generally result in detention.

Foster care placements are non-secure (unlocked) settings in out-of home care. For a more detailed discussion of these types of placements, see the Youth Law Center’s Fact Sheet: Overview of the Foster Care System in California.

Juvenile probation camps and ranches are generally shorter-term programs and are authorized to provide educational services, counseling, a variety of vocational training, work experience and recreational activities. Some counties contract with other counties for camp programs, meaning that a juvenile may be placed in another county than where they live.

The DJJ facilities represent the most restrictive setting and commitments are limited to serious juvenile offenders.²² Juveniles committed directly to DJJ facilities do not receive determinate sentencing, but are subject to a maximum time of confinement set by the juvenile court.²³ The period of incarceration is determined by the Juvenile Board of Parole which has the authority to discharge a juvenile's commitment to DJJ.²⁴

How does a juvenile offender end up in adult court?

A juvenile offender can be tried in adult court in three possible scenarios. First, if the nature of the alleged crime is particularly serious, the District Attorney can request, at the time of filing a petition, that the juvenile be remanded to adult court because he or she is unfit to be judged as a juvenile.²⁵ The juvenile court will make the determination of whether or not the juvenile should be remanded to adult court in a fitness hearing.

Second, the District Attorney, without judicial review, has discretion to directly file cases in adult court in the following scenarios.

- When a 14 –15 year old²⁶ is:
 - Charged with an offense punishable by death or life without the possibility of parole (LWOP); or
 - Charged with personal use of a firearm in commission of a felony; or
 - Charged with committing a serious offense²⁷ and:
 - The juvenile has been previously adjudicated for a serious offense; or
 - The offense was committed as part of criminal street gang activity; or
 - The offense committed is a hate crime; or
 - The victim was elderly, blind, deaf or disabled.

- When a 16-17 year old is:
 - Charged with committing a serious offense;²⁸ or
 - Charged with any of the following where the minor has a previous felony adjudication at 14 years or older:
 - A felony where the victim is elderly, blind, deaf or disabled; or
 - A felony that is a hate crime; or
 - Any offense in association with or on behalf of a criminal street gang.²⁹

Third, minors 14 years or older accused of committing specified violent crimes, must automatically be filed in adult criminal court.³⁰ These specified offenses include, but are not limited to: personally committing murder where a special circumstance is alleged, and personally committing a serious sex offense where certain circumstances are alleged.

Is a juvenile convicted in adult court subject to the same sentencing as adults?

Generally, if the juvenile is tried and convicted in adult court, they can receive any sentence an adult could receive for the same offense, up to and including, life without the possibility of parole³¹. Further, a juvenile convicted in adult court may be sent to the California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation, Division of Juvenile Facilities or state prison if they are 16 years of age or older.³²

Juveniles convicted in adult court may, in other limited circumstances, be sentenced to DJJ.

- A juvenile who was directly filed into adult court can request the court, with the prosecutor's consent, to impose a juvenile disposition if the juvenile was convicted of an offense that would not justify direct file and the minor's age would have qualified for a fitness hearing with a presumption of unfitness in the Juvenile Court.³³
- The court must impose the juvenile disposition if the minor's age would have qualified for a fitness hearing with a presumption of fitness in the Juvenile Court, unless the prosecutor prevails on his/her motion to find the minor not fit for the Juvenile Court.³⁴
- Additionally, where the juvenile is convicted of an offense that does not render the minor eligible for transfer to adult court, the sentence must be a juvenile disposition.³⁵

Any minor convicted in adult court who is eligible for a juvenile disposition can request the court to remand the case back to the Juvenile Court for the disposition hearing.³⁶

Commitment (sentence) to DJJ is prohibited under certain circumstances including when³⁷:

- The minor is convicted of a violent felony³⁸ and is sentenced to life or has a maximum determinate sentence that would extend beyond the minor's 25th birthday; or
- The conviction is for a direct file offense;³⁹ or

³¹ However, the United States Supreme Court, in Graham v. Florida 130 S.Ct. 2011 (2010) held that a life sentence without the possibility of parole for a juvenile in a non-homicide case is unconstitutional.

- The conviction is for a serious offense⁴⁰ and the minor is 16 years or older when the offense was committed.

Does a minor in the juvenile justice system have the same constitutional rights as an adult in the criminal justice system?

A minor in the juvenile court does not have a right to bail or to a jury trial. However, a juvenile does have the following rights:

- Right to have Miranda rights read at the time of arrest;
- Right to remain silent;
- Right to have an attorney present prior to any police interrogation;
- Right to an attorney throughout the court process and to have the court appoint an attorney if the juvenile cannot afford one;
- Right to be given a copy of the petition (charge);
- Right to a hearing to confront and cross examine witnesses.
